Form of Bequest

I give and bequeath to The Century Association, of the City of New York, a New York corporation, the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The Century was founded and its first Constitution adopted on January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association. Forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders; forty-six others joined during the year. The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, the Association was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended on March 29, 1883.

During its early years, The Century occupied rooms at 495 Broadway from the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849, at 435 Broome Street to the spring of 1850, and at 575 Broadway until May, 1852.

By this time, it required a house and moved to 24 Clinton Place (now 46 East Eighth Street). This was its home until the spring of 1857, when it made another move, to a house at 109 (old number 42) East Fifteenth Street. On January 10, 1891, it occupied its present Clubhouse at 7 West 43rd Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

The lamp that burns at each meeting of The Century was designed in 1858 for The Column, a literary society founded in 1825. It was lighted at all subsequent meetings of The Column until Centurions John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, the only surviving members of that organization, presented it to The Century in 1901 as "a silver symbol intended to be a lasting memorial to The Column." They also presented to "all present and future members" of The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The minutes of their meeting concluded, "The Column then adjourned sine die." Today, more than one hundred years later, the lamp still burns.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1962:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

COMMITTEE ON EXHIBITIONS

The program arranged by the Committee on Exhibitions brought the following to the Gallery during the year:

January 10–March 4: Paintings by Gari Melchers, President of The Century in 1931 and 1932

March 7–May 27: Murals, Water Colors, Sketches, and Drawings by Artist Members

June 6–September 23: Drawings and Models of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts

October 3–October 26: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 7–January 6: Autumn Exhibition of Sculpture and Oil Paintings by Artist Members

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, Louis Bouché and John Koch, the jury to make the awards, chose works by the following artists, who received silver ash trays from Cartier's: Adriaan J. Barnouw, Hugh de Haven, Samuel E. Homsey, Robert S. Hutchins, John C. B. Moore, Carl E. Newton, and Leonard J. Robbins. Raven's Nest by Samuel E. Homsey was also awarded an ash tray as winner of the popular vote. Those receiving Honorable Mention were: Winthrop W. Aldrich, Nathaniel Benchley, Erdman Harris, Albert C. Santy, and Edgar I. Williams.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Sculpture and Oil Paintings by Artist Members, a jury consisting of Barry Faulkner, Chairman, Henry S. F. Cooper, and James Johnson Sweeney awarded the Art Committee Medal to Thomas P. Blagden for his painting Autumn Landscape. Honorable Mention was given to Adolf Dehn for his painting Winter Night, to Xavier Gonzalez for his painting Arua Potter, and to Paul Manship for his bronze figurine, Sketch for the Gateway Group, Children's Zoo, Central Park. Portrait of Professor Kenneth B. Murdock by Gardner Cox, was winner of the popular vote.

HOUSE-ART COMMITTEE

A portrait of Paul Kieffer, painted by John C. Johansen, has been presented to the Association by the artist. This excellent painting has been temporarily hung in the entrance hall.

The work of cleaning and restoring pictures continued. Mt. Chocorua by John Kensett was cleaned and rehung in the East Room. Kensett's larger painting of The Falls was repaired and cleaned and has been hung in the Reception Room. A new lighting fixture with spot lights focused on the center pictures of the East and North walls of the Reception Room has been installed.

The following works from the Association's collection were loaned during the year:

To the Saint Gaudens Museum of Cornish, New Hampshire:
Portrait of Henry James by John LaFarge.

To the Art Students League of New York: Portrait of Ivan Olinsky by John LaFarge.

To the National Gallery of Art in Washington: Italian Girl at Wayside Shrine by John Gadsby Chapman.

Henry S. F. Cooper, Chairman, Committee on Art; Robert Beverly Hale, Chairman,
Committee on Exhibitions; Lewis G. Adams,
Chairman, House-Art Committee.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

AMONG the concerns of the Committee during the calendar year of 1962 was provision for the dressing and repair of leatherbound books, a large proportion of our Library collection. Henry Clapp Smith with a corps of assistants undertook the task with excellent results for the appearance of our shelves in several areas as well as for the longer life of many valuable and useful books.

Of the various exhibits in the showcases on the stairways under Library arrangement, a notable one set forth books from the Graham Collection. They were books inscribed by their authors and presented to James Lorimer Graham, who was both a Centurion and for a time the official Librarian of the club. As these works are protected in the vault, it is only on rare occasions that members and their guests have opportunity to view them.

The librarians report that the total of individual reference, research, and advisory services performed and recorded during the year amounted to 763. The figure omits, of course, such insignificant items as directing someone to a particular shelf. Under the Committee's present policy of permitting limited circulation, 76 books went out on loan and with prompt return by most borrowers.

For the customary statistical report, it may be noted that there were 559 accessions, of which 449 books were by purchase on recommendation by the Committee, and 110 by donation, chiefly by Century-Authors. The books and pamphlets with Century connections numbered 105. The periodical list, apart from local newspapers, totaled 93 titles—74 by club subscription, 19 by gift.

When gifts of books and magazine subscriptions are so numerous, it is hardly practicable to list donors and gifts individually, but the Committee expresses appreciation for the widespread interest of club members in enriching our reading resources. Unfortunately some otherwise acceptable gifts offered have been turned down for lack of space in the building. Folio volumes, for example, create difficulties. The Committee and the librarians continue to struggle with the problem of space limitations.

William L. Savage, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

THE major concern of the Committee this year has been how to maintain, in the face of severely rising costs, the food and service of the Club at the level that the members expect. In order to help the Treasurer with his budget problems, certain upward adjustments were made in the prices of the meals and the drinks.

The yearly upkeep and maintenance work was carried out in all parts of the building without making any obvious changes.

At the Monthly Dinners, Centurions gave talks of unusual interest. In January, Robert Cushman Murphy told of trips toward the South Pole with his magnificently illustrated lecture "Antarctica—the Once and Future Ice Age"; in February, Sheldon Keck talked on "The Detection of Forgery in Paintings" and with slides showed how the tricks are uncovered; in March, Barry Faulkner talked on "Century Artists and the Connecticut River Valley"; in April, Father George B. Ford reviewed a perennial topic of discussion, "How Close to Reunion Are the Christian Churches of the World?"; and in May, Alfred Bendiner gave a most amusing account of his trips to Persia and Yucatán with "Archaeological Expeditions As the Artist Sees Them." In June the established custom was continued of gathering for only pleasant conversation and good food and drink.

The new members of the year were welcomed at the Dinner in October by President Kieffer, who asked Dr. Yale Kneeland, Jr. to explain the perils of membership in The Century. The November meeting, by custom, was a Wine Festival presided over by our President and fully illustrated by many Centurions working on the theme of the grape and its concomitants. In December, Lewis Galantière gave us many lucid thoughts with "A Few Words on Translations."

Mr. Marchand is to be complimented on the way his excellent staff has kept the Club running smoothly and efficiently.

William Potter, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

ON Saturday afternoon, December 16, 1961, the Riverside Chamber Singers presented a concert of madrigals and carols. The Committee has endeavored to develop the December concert as a pre-Christmas celebration. Mr. Marchand's special egg-nog enhanced the occasion for the large number of members and guests who attended.

On Saturday, February 17, 1962, a brilliant piano recital was given by William Masselos. The program included works by Scarlatti, Schumann, and Liszt, as well as some unusually good contemporary pieces by Hovhaness, Chavez, and Weber.

On Saturday, March 24, the Claremont String Quartet played works by Schumann and Beethoven, and Quartet No. 6 by Centurion Quincy Porter, who was present to receive enthusiastic applause.

On Tuesday, April 10, Miss Billie Lynn Daniel gave a program which included among other songs some Hugo Wolf Lieder and a group by Debussy. A large audience applauded Miss Daniel and congratulated her father for another contribution to the happiness of Centurions.

George Mead, Chairman

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

To the Constitution: On the recommendation of the Board of Management, the Association, at its Monthly Meeting on April 4, 1963, adopted amendments to the following sections: Article IV, Section 2, to change the Constitutional schedule of the meetings of the Board of Management; Article VI, Section 2, to combine in one section the provisions contained in old Sections 2 and 5 of this Article, and to delete the restriction that non-resident members do not have the right to vote; Article VI, Section 3, last paragraph, to take account of the removal of the restriction that non-resident members do not have the right to vote; Article VI, old Section 5 to be deleted, its provisions having been transferred to Section 2 of this Article; Article VI, old Sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, to be renumbered because of the deleting of old Section 5; Article VI, Section 8, first paragraph, to increase the annual dues of resident members to $180 and those of non-resident members to $90. These Amendments are included in the Constitution as printed in this Year-Book.

To the By-Laws: Also on the recommendation of the Board of Management, the Association, at its Monthly Meeting on March 7, 1963, amended the following By-Laws: By-Law 4, Section (a), to liberalize the privileges of members to bring guests; By-Law 4, Section (d), to include in this section the provision of old Section (e) concerning the limitation on the House Committee's authority to issue a month's Clubhouse privilege for a guest; By-Law 4, Section (e), to simplify the complicated wording of this section after taking account of a non-resident's receiving the right to vote; By-Law 11, first two paragraphs, to change the schedule for the election of the Nominating Committee. These amendments are included in the By-Laws as printed in this Year-Book.

ACT OF INCORPORATION

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

HOUSE RULES

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from October to May inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI OF THE MEMBERS

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York City. They shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

A resident member with the qualifications for non-resident membership may become a non-resident member upon application in writing to the Treasurer. Such member shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of holding office. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 6. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.
[Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 7. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred eighty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be ninety dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter.
[Amended April 4, 1963.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the

Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 8. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 9. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 10. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII OF MEETINGS

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

OF AMENDMENTS

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Guests and Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the general rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee, and is also subject to the following limitations: prior to three o'clock in the afternoon, a member may introduce only one guest a day, and may not introduce the same person more than twice in the calendar year; after three o'clock, a member may introduce up to three guests a day, and may introduce the same person as often as once a month. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management. A member may not obtain from the House Committee—nor may the Committee grant—such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same person more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time.

[Amended March 7, 1963.]

(e) Only guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraph (j) of this By-Law may introduce visitors to the Clubhouse. No guest or visitor may be present at any business meeting of the Association. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its April meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the June monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the June monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in June, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

1. Admittance to the club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A.M.
2. There will be no breakfast on Sundays.
Week days, breakfast will start at eight o'clock in the morning.
3. Week days, the Dining Room will be closed at nine o'clock in the evening.
4. Sundays, a buffet will be served from one o'clock in the afternoon to eight-thirty o'clock in the evening, except that there will be no restaurant or bar service on Saturdays or Sundays during the summer season.
5. The Bar will be open from noon to midnight except on Sundays and holidays, when it will be open from one o'clock in the afternoon to nine o'clock in the evening.
6. Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.
7. No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P.M. on Saturday nights, or after one A.M. on other nights.
8. The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A.M.

LADIES IN THE CLUBHOUSE

Ladies invited by members of the Association may visit the Art Gallery from 10:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., either accompanied or unaccompanied by a member. As visitors to the Art Gallery, they may not pass to other parts of the Club-house.

Subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or his designee, ladies may attend luncheon, afternoon, or dinner meetings of boards and other committees of non-profit organizations operating in the public interest, provided that such meetings are held in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse. Non-members of the Association attending such meetings may not pass to the upper floors of the Clubhouse.

On special occasions arranged by the Association for Centurions and their guests, such as concerts or literary afternoons, ladies may be permitted to visit the second floor of the Clubhouse.

Except as stated above, ladies may not be admitted to the rooms of the Clubhouse.

PUBLICITY

To avoid the possibility of involving the name of the Association in public controversy, members shall (1) refrain from using the name or the address of the Association in communications intended to be published or printed, (2) take all reasonable precautions to prevent public mention of meetings of any character that are held in the Clubhouse, and (3) assume responsibility for the exclusion from private rooms of reporters and news photographers on assignment.

BUSINESS CONFERENCES

Members discussing business in the Clubhouse are requested to confine such conferences as far as possible to the Association's private rooms. They should refrain from laying out business papers in the common rooms of the Clubhouse.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconds are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

“AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS”

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word “amateur” in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words “amateurs of letters and the fine arts” as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century’s membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

FROM 1847 to 1857 there was no president of the Association. At each meeting a member, usually one of the "Committee of Management," was "called to the chair." In 1857 the office of President was created. The offices of First Vice-President and Second Vice-President were created in 1867, and the first incumbents were elected in 1868.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY ROGER BURLINGAME

Historian of the Association

George Matthew Adams

A grass-roots philosopher, a journalist with international reach, an editor and a manager, so to speak, of writers, George Adams used all of these vocations to conduct one of the most popular news and feature syndicates in America. He not only built many writers by publishing their contributions in his syndicated columns, but he frequently assigned important writers to special news stories—domestic and foreign—and liberally paid their expenses. Among what a Centurion friend irreverently calls his “trained seals” was the late Centurion William Allan White whom he chose to cover various national political conventions and, in Europe, to do the report on the Treaty of Versailles.

The story is told that once when he wanted expert coverage of a San Francisco national convention, Adams rented a house, complete with maids and a cook for those particular “trained seals” whom he chose to do the job. Among them was Centurion White. The first thing these ungrateful writers did was to fire the cook. From then on, Centurion White did the marketing because he loved to bring home the wonderful seafood and fantastic vegetables from the San Francisco markets. Miss Edna Ferber, who had a special talent in that direction, did the cooking and the other seals washed the dishes.

For his columns, George Adams wrote a daily essay called "Today's Talk" which had a wide range including religion and dogs. He syndicated the verse of Edgar Guest who, though his lyrics may not be applauded by today's Centurion poets, nevertheless had a considerable vogue in a more innocent era. The verses of Walt Mason were also features of Adams's column.

Adams was born in Salina, Michigan. He earned his way through his early education by working as a janitor. He graduated in 1901 from Ottawa University, Ottawa, Kansas. For the next six years, he held jobs as elevator operator, department manager of an advertising company, and advertising copywriter for Swift and Company. In 1907, with borrowed capital, he started his syndicate. William Allan White was one of the first of his writers and helped bring him quick success. Today, his syndicate serves more than a hundred newspapers in many parts of the world.

George Adams was also a collector of rare etchings and books and has made gifts of these to the National Gallery in Washington and to the libraries of Dartmouth, Yale, the University of Michigan, and the Tuskegee Institute. In 1959, he received the Freedoms Foundation Award for "outstanding achievement in bringing about better understanding between peoples."

George Simpson Armstrong

George Armstrong's formal title was "consulting engineer," but he might well be called a "pathologist of industry." He approached his career by a curious path, yet the connection between his earlier interest and his later success seems to have been sealed by what an intimate called his talent for

"intuitive diagnosis." As a boy, medicine fascinated him; he persuaded surgeons to let him watch operations, and he formed the habit of analyzing symptoms and processes of medical correction. But his family's circumstances made impossible the long training needed for what he most wanted—to be a doctor—and instead of pursuing education he had to take a job. As office boy for a large company, he got interested in both business and engineering. However, for useful work in either, he had to somehow find an education higher than that of the high school from which he had graduated. He spoke of his ambition to an officer of the company who was able to get him a university scholarship that resulted in a B.S. in civil engineering.

From this point he moved through a sequence of positions to the level of his life's work. This was study and analysis of the relations of management and industrial engineering. To acquire a background against which he could make immediate practical recommendations, he engaged in a scholarly review of the whole history of industry and of the growing closeness of industry and business.

When he was taken into the National City Bank in charge of industrial investigation, he was at last able to observe and judge the symptoms of various corporations and thus guide the investments of the bank customers. Finally he established his own company to carry on the consulting work. Here his gift of "diagnosis" had full opportunity for expression.

Armstrong was born in Brooklyn, received his early education at public schools there, and got his B.S. from New York University in 1908. He worked successively at the Thompson Starrett Construction Company, the Alphons Cus-todis Chimney Company, the Carpenter Steel Company of which he was a member of the metallurgical staff, Suffern and Son, and as staff engineer of Miller, Franklin, Bassett and Company. He entered the National City Company and National City Bank in 1921. He established George S. Armstrong and Company of New York in 1932.

He was on the board of trustees of Roberts College, Istanbul, president of the American Institute of Consulting Engineers, and a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. He was the author of An Engineer in Wall Street. He took an active part in the civic and philanthropical work of his home town, Greenwich, Connecticut.

He was a Centurion for fourteen years.

George Perry Auld

By profession an accountant and, incidentally, a gifted author on his subject, George Auld became involved in international economics soon after the First World War. For an early article entitled "Reparations and the Policy of Repudiation" he adopted the pen name of "Alpha." He then held the important office of accountant-general of the Inter-Allied Reparation Commission, and the views he publicly expressed were far too controversial for him to acknowledge their true authorship. Because the article opposed the view of Keynes and his disciples that France should forego any substantial payments from Germany, it caused a stir and led to an animated correspondence in the London Times between Keynes and "Alpha" and to many articles and comments in England and America. Later, another piece in Foreign Affairs, entitled "The Reparation Problem Today," attracted wide attention. In this and in other articles on European economics, he combined exactitude in detail with a broad political view.

George Auld was born in Rutland, Vermont, and graduated cum laude from the University of Vermont. Later the university gave him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

He began his career as certified public accountant with the Navy Supply Corps. In the First World War, he was an aide to Admiral William S. Sims, commander of United States naval forces in Europe. For this service, he received the Navy Cross. After the war he was assistant financial adviser to the United States Peace Mission in Paris, then accountant-general of the Inter-Allied Reparations Committee. In 1924, he was assistant to Owen Young, later agent general of the Dawes Plan. For this service he was awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor. In the Second World War, he was chief of the cost and audit branch of the Navy's Office of Procurement and Matériel.

George Auld was a non-resident member of the Century for thirty-two years.

Thomas Hunt Barber

In his twenty-fifth anniversary college report, Tom Barber gave his occupation as "farmer." Farming, however, had at that time been his occupation for only a year. He had been a lawyer, a banker, an army officer and a student of military history, a writer, and an eager traveler. Some of his friends thought that in farming he was happiest, yet there was frustration here, too, because Tom was a restless soul and farming tended to send his roots deep into the soil and hold him to one spot. Perhaps closer to the truth is the observation that he was born a hundred years or so too late; that what he wanted to be was a bluff, homespun frontiersman, chopping down forests in search of new lands. This, anyway, was the part he seemed to play, speaking slowly, in as near a drawl as his Yankee tongue would let him, and reducing matters that seemed complex to others to what he regarded as simple "horse sense." Yet he was proud, too, of his Harvard education and could quickly forget his pioneer role in philosophical argument or the presentation of a purely intellectual concept.

Tom had a selective memory; he could recount humorous episodes from his travels in exotic places that entertained us on many a warm evening at the Club. His bias was always conservative; he had little sympathy with liberal views, yet he let those who held them talk and present their side. He was a consistent Anglophobe and appeared to regret that Britain and the United States had so many interests in common. In general his likes and dislikes were strong; he was wholly loyal to those he felt were his friends. His prejudices were quite unconventional and he was unmoved by any pressure of public opinion.

Thomas Barber was educated at Groton School and Harvard College. He received his law degree from Columbia Law School. He practiced law for a time in New York but became interested in investment banking and joined the firm of Roosevelt and Son. In the First World War, he was a major in the army and was awarded the Silver Star for his service in the Argonne theatre. From war's end to 1920, he was with the Office of Civil Affairs in Germany. In the 1930s, he was a founder of the National Economy League. In the Second World War he was a professor of military government in the Civil Affairs School of the U.S. Army at the University of Virginia.

He was a devoted Centurion and rarely missed a monthly meeting.

Robert Woods Bliss

Effective and intelligent men can cut red tape no matter how much of that encumbrance binds the position they hold. A Centurion remembers that Robert Bliss once got him out of a tight spot by doing just that. It was when Bliss was with the American Embassy in Paris. This young man, who had been in the French army during the early years of the First World War, was in the process of transferring to the A.E.F., and told Bliss his troubles.

"When I changed armies I wanted to go to England to see my mother while waiting for orders in the American Army. The question was 'how.' I was no longer a French soldier, I was not a civilian and had no passport. Robert Bliss cut through this little technicality like a snow-plow in mid-winter. He sent me down to get a passport from one of the junior secretaries. The man called up and began asking Bliss questions. I could hear Bliss's voice over the phone: 'I didn't tell you to interrogate this man, I told you to give him a passport. Now give it to him.' "

It was this talent for direct dealing that enabled Bliss to perform the arduous task of counselor to the Embassy after the retirement of the immensely popular ambassador, Robert Herrick. It served him well in all his diplomatic posts.

It was not only as a diplomat, however, that Robert Bliss won both public and private recognition. He was a collector of indigenous American art and a connoisseur of Byzantine art. His collecting had been done over long periods of traveling in South America, Mexico and other parts of Central America, Turkey, and Greece. In 1947, he let the National Gallery of Art in Washington make public his American collection. Meanwhile, in 1940, he and Mrs. Bliss donated their estate, Dumbarton Oaks, in the District of Columbia to Harvard University. This became the scene of the international conference that was involved in the beginnings of the United Nations. Robert Bliss also gave Harvard a research library and art collection from the medieval and Byzantine period.

Robert Woods Bliss was born in St. Louis in 1875. He graduated from Harvard in 1900. His first post was in Puerto Rico, where he was secretary to the governor. He was then consul in Venice and was transferred from there to St. Petersburg as embassy secretary. In 1923, he was named minister to Sweden and served there for four years. During that time he got to know the Crown Prince (who later became King) and was instrumental in bringing the Prince to the attention of Harvard University as a candidate for an honorary degree. In 1927, he went to Argentina as ambassador.

He was a member of the board of overseers of Harvard College, The Council on Foreign Relations, The Foreign Policy Association, and the Metropolitan Museum. His trusteeships included the Carnegie Institution, the National Institute of Public Affairs, the American Museum of Natural History, the American-Scandinavian Foundation, and the American Society of the French Legion of Honor. He was president of the American Foreign Service Association.

Centurion friends describe Bob Bliss as sweet-tempered, considerate and benevolent, simple, friendly, and natural. The hospitality which he and Mrs. Bliss showed Americans who called on them in their various foreign posts was warm and abundant. A Centurion who was in the Senate when they lived in Washington recalls: ‘He and Mrs. Bliss might be said to have stood at the apex of Washington social life, but they never gave any parties for the sake of giving parties. They never were concerned about whether anyone was ‘important.’’

Bliss lived to be eighty-six. He was a Centurion for nearly half of his life.

John Henry Chapman

The Reverend John Chapman was of quiet and rather solitary disposition, and could more often be found reading in a lonely corner of the Library than as part of a group. But he was proud of his physical vigor. He appeared at the Club one day in his eighty-sixth year and announced that he had walked there from the General Theological Seminary in Chelsea Square.

Chapman was a member of the class of 1898 at the University of Virginia, and received his degree of Doctor of Divinity from General Theological Seminary in New York in 1901.

He was rector of St. Paul’s Protestant Episcopal Church at Chestnut Hill in Philadelphia at the time of his retirement in 1925. He had previously served as rector of Upperville, Virginia, and Ridgefield, Connecticut. After his retirement, he assisted at St. John’s Church in Stamford and was chaplain of Rosemary Hall School at Stamford, Connecticut.

Norman Coke-Jephcott

Churchmen know that there are times before and after every service, when the congregation is entering or leaving the church, when the organist is left free to create his own music. This may be dull and routine or it may be rich and inspiring. Norman Coke-Jephcott was known for his imaginative and exciting improvisation. He was also a composer. His "Surely the Lord Is in This Place" had a circulation of some 3,000 copies in 1962; his "Variation and Toccata on a National Air" and his "Miniature Trilogy" have had wide popular acceptance as recital pieces. As organist and trainer of choristers, he has left a permanent mark on the character of the music of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. He had, further, an influence on contemporary church music throughout America.

He was born in Coventry, England, sixty-eight years ago. In Coventry, he was assistant organist at Trinity Church. His first American positions were as organist of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Cross at Kingston, New York, the Episcopal Church of the Messiah in Rhinebeck, and Grace Episcopal Church in Utica.

He was appointed organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in 1932 and held the post until his retirement in 1953.

He was a Fellow of the American Guild of Organists, and a member of the National Examination Committee of the Guild.

He was a Centurion for eleven years.

Robert Treat Crane

Directly descended from both President John Adams and Governor of Connecticut Robert Treat, it seems appropriate that Centurion Crane should have devoted his life and talents to political science. His service was research; he was not only expert in method and widely knowledgeable in every subject he studied but he hewed steadfastly to the line that led to practical results and persistently refused to go astray under the pressure of the fashions of the times. In his own political views he was so independent that he always applied the term "mugwump" to himself.

For policy decisions, democratic governments must always be dependent upon national privately financed organizations that are committed to basic research in the social sciences. One of the most useful of these is the Social Science Research Council of which Crane was executive director from 1931 to 1945. His particular field was political science; his specialty in that field was the city management form of government. The people of many American cities that have adopted managers are grateful to him for his help.

Dr. Crane was born in Baltimore and educated at Johns Hopkins University from which he received his A.B. in 1902 and his Ph.D. in 1907. For two years he was American vice-consul at Montreal and consul in Guadeloupe and Rosario. He was appointed assistant professor of political science at the University of Michigan in 1913 and eventually full professor of that subject and director of the university's bureau of government. It was in 1923 that he helped found the Social Science Research Council.

A Centurion who worked with Dr. Crane on the Council describes him as "a gentleman in the meaning of the word at the turn of the century—quiet, sincere, reserved, scholarly with only a very gentle sense of humor." His devotion to the Council gave members of its staff increasing respect for the Council and a growing awareness of its value as well as confidence in themselves, completely preoccupied as they were with its work.

Crane was a member of The American Political Science Association, The American Academy of Arts and Sciences, The American Philosophical Society, and Phi Beta Kappa. He was the author of The State of Constitutional and International Law (1907) and Digest of City Manager Charters (1923).

He was a Centurion for just short of thirty years.

Jay Norwood Darling

Ding's farewell cartoon, published by his instruction, after his death, is testimony to an enthusiastic life, fully lived. The caption is "Bye Now—It's Been Wonderful Knowing You"; below is a drawing of his studio, the door is ajar and a vanishing ghost, hat in hand, is rushing out of it. The room is a mad clutter of things he loved: hunting guns, duck decoys, fishing rods and reels, pictures of flying game birds, an easel, brushes, and, all over the floor, hundreds of sketches for cartoons. By the time this drawing was printed, the name he used—shortened from his own—was known everywhere in the country and in much of the world besides.

Ding's work is a collateral record of more than fifty years of American history. It might well be assigned to students of that time as an aid to the understanding of events; it would give them, too, many a belly-laugh. "His insight," said Centurion Herbert Hoover, "into national life lifted his cartoons into the high rank of great and trenchant editorials. His kindness and humor were but the reflections of his own character."

Ding drew political cartoons about thirteen presidential elections; six presidents were his personal friends. Both presidents and unsuccessful candidates for the office were so delighted with his drawings that they asked for the originals—even those in opposition. Al Smith, for example, made a collection of cartoons that supported Hoover at his expense.

Darling's greatest extracurricular enthusiasm was for conservation and, in recognition of his interest, he was given the Theodore Roosevelt Gold Medal Award. He helped found the National Wildlife Federation and was its first president. The National Audubon Society gave him its Audubon medal.

Jay Darling was born in Norwood, Michigan, in 1876. He received his Ph.B. degree from Beloit College in 1900. The year before his graduation, he worked as a reporter on the Sioux City Tribune; in 1900, he became a reporter on the Sioux City Journal. It was his habit to accompany his news stories with sketches and he soon became the paper's political cartoonist. A few years later, he got a job as cartoonist for the Des Moines Register and Des Moines was his home for most of his life. From 1917 to 1949 his work was distributed by the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate. In 1923, he won the Pulitzer Prize for the best editorial cartoon, and he won it again in 1942. In 1934, the Editor and Publisher took a poll of American newspapers and, as a result, Ding was named the outstanding cartoonist of the United States. In this year he went to Washington on a conservation mission to forestall the extinction of several kinds of migratory water fowl and he served for about two years as chief of the United States Biological Survey.

On the Herald Tribune he had many friends who were inspired by his enthusiasms and identified him with his work. To them, every drawing seemed like him; they felt his immediate presence in everything he did. He remembered with special affection Mrs. Ogden Reid, to whom he wrote many letters, and our late loved president, Geoffrey Parsons.

An amusing incident—though it hovered on the brink of tragedy—was the rumor, in 1925, that he had died of a serious illness, which he had indeed suffered, and the pleasure he got from reading the post-mortem encomiums reminds us of the essay by the late Centurion, Elmer Davis, "On Not Being Dead as Reported."

Jay Darling was elected to the Century in 1928 but, of necessity, we saw him all too seldom.

Luis de Florez

It is unusual for a man to try for and get his flyer's wings at the age of fifty. Luis de Florez, at fifty, finished the eleven-month navy course in six weeks. Wings were all this distinguished rear admiral of the U.S. Navy lacked to fill out his career as aviation expert. Before he earned them, his talents as inventor and mechanical engineer had made it possible for hundreds of novice pilots to become prepared for combat.

His main interest was the invention and development of machines for the training of aviators—machines which simulated the conditions of fighting in the air with such realism that crew members of aircraft in actual warfare could act almost on reflex. These were called, in air force language, "synthetics" and a Congressional subcommittee for naval affairs stated that by his devices hundreds of training hours had been saved. "The invention, development and production of synthetics," the subcommittee found, "has been little short of miraculous." Thus, the remarkable performances in both army and navy air forces in the Second World War by men whose training had been necessarily brief were, to a large extent, due to his efforts. An index of the rapid incorporation of his devices into wartime schedules is the increase in appropriations for this kind of "synthetic" research from $50,000 to $10,000,000 in two years.

As a prelude to his aeronautical engineering, Luis de Florez worked in the field of motor-fuel refining. One of the first petroleum-cracking formulas is attributed to him. At the start of the First World War, he was in England, manager of a fuel company. There, his inventive genius showed itself when he designed what is considered to have been the first accurate sight for anti-aircraft guns for the protection of the plant in which he worked.

Though his parentage was Spanish and French, de Florez was born in New York. He graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a mechanical engineer in 1912. In the First World War, he served in the navy's Bureau of Construction and Repair in Washington. There he designed and produced many aircraft instruments and accessories. Through the 1930s, he was an officer in the Naval Reserve and, in ten years from 1934, he was promoted from lieutenant commander to rear admiral. During this period he made a special study of German aviation and of the building of Germany's air force, and his findings were valuable to the Allies in the Second World War.

In that war, he became Director of the Special Devices Division of the Bureau of Aeronautics. During operations in the Pacific, he accompanied the celebrated Task Force 58 under command of Vice-Admiral Mark A. Mitscher. For his various services, he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

It was characteristic of de Florez that he ran where other men walked. He was barely five feet tall, had a small black waxed mustache, and a distinctly Latin appearance.

Imrie de Vegh

A true internationalist, speaking four languages besides his own, Imrie de Vegh was equally at home in London, Paris, Madrid, or New York. This, these days, is a good thing for an economist to be, now that markets are merging and we look to the time when national barriers will no longer impede the distribution of world resources. But de Vegh was more than an economist; he had an informed interest in most of the arts, he was an authority on rare books, and had a discriminating taste for rare wines and fine food—gifts which made him at home in the Century too.

A native of Budapest, descended from a line of proud and distinguished Hungarians, Imrie received his higher education at the University of Budapest and later at Trinity College in Cambridge. He came naturally by his interest in the realm of finance, for his father had been chief counselor of the Hungarian National Bank.

At the beginning of the troubles that ended in a sequence of tragedies for Hungary, he came to the United States. Two years later, in 1932, he became consulting economist to the firm of Scudder, Stevens and Clark, investment counselors, and was with them until the United States entered the Second World War. He was then called to the War Production Board as assistant to the production vice-chairman. After the war, he was senior partner of Pell, de Vegh and Company which became de Vegh and Company in 1952. He was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Economic Association, and the Conference of Business Economists.

It was characteristic of Imrie that he should give one of his firm's clients valuable advice not only about his investments but about his intended purchase of a copy of Shakespeare's third folio. The client spoke of this intention, adding that of course the firm could not be expected to help him here. But Imrie wrote an extraordinarily detailed analysis of the history, sales prices, and values of all the Shakespeare folios and demonstrated conclusively that the dealer with whom the client was about to trade was asking far too much for his copy compared with its value.

In his last years, Imrie was working on key problems for the Kennedy administration offering original and practical solutions. Unhappily he did not live to see the application of all of them.

A fellow Centurion said of Imrie de Vegh: "He was not afraid to show emotion. A man of wit, humor and passion, he could laugh heartily over a skillful turn of phrase, though the joke be on himself; he could weep when touched by beauty or sorrow; and he could show quick impatience, even anger, at incompetence or stupidity. Wherever he went, people recognized in him an original and highly talented man."

He joined us when he was only thirty-seven—younger than most Centurions—but he left us, too, at fifty-five, the age when most of us are in our prime.

Frederic Russell Dolbeare

A Centurion remembers that the day after he was elected Fred Dolbeare came to the Round Table in the East Room and sat among strangers there as if they were old friends. He showed not a sign of the timidity that has afflicted some of us in the first days of our membership and, in a matter of seconds, he was one of us. It was soon evident that he understood the art of conversation, the give and let give that permits the smooth interchange of ideas: a quality that is uncommon in a person of Fred's wide experience in posts of dominant importance. Indeed his modesty, his reluctance to insist on his views, astonished us when we got to know his background.

Sensitive for many years to the international pulse, Fred occupied several important posts in London, Berlin, Vienna, and Berne. He was a delegate to the peace conference in Paris after the First World War and attended the conference in Berlin in 1921 in which there was exchange of ratifications between the United States and Germany. Later he was counselor to the legations in Ottawa and in Berne. Everywhere he was known for his poise and his constant good humor, but also for his personal sympathy toward those he worked with and those who came to him with their troubles.

He was born in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and was a member of the class of 1907 at Yale. He studied law at Columbia Law School and the University of Munich. He entered the diplomatic service in 1915 and his first post was as secretary to the embassy at London. He left the service in 1928 to go into private banking business, but he was recalled to international areas in 1932 by Centurion Henry L. Stimson, then Secretary of State, as adviser to the Geneva disarmament conference. Afterward he went to Bangkok and was, for a time, adviser to the Thai Foreign Ministry. There he helped negotiate treaties between Thailand and other nations including the United States. In recognition of his service he was awarded the Grand Cross of the Crown of Siam.

In 1949, Fred Dolbeare was a founder of the National Committee for Free Europe and became its vice-president and secretary. He took an active part in the work of Radio Free Europe.

An intimate Centurion friend remembers that Fred's usual cheery calm disappeared whenever he suspected treachery. "Then," this friend writes, "his mouth became a steel trap and his eyes two balls of flame and he went into action."

Fred was with us a scant ten years, but in those he made more friends and fixed more memories than most of us do in double the time.

John Van Nostrand Dorr

John Dorr was an inventor of mining machinery whose name is known in every corner of the world in which ores are dug. In addition to his metallurgical work, he was a chemical engineer and developed sanitary engineering machinery. After many years of exceedingly active engineering, he went to live on the banks of the Saugatuck River in Connecticut and continued research work in a laboratory he made for himself in an old mill there. It was in this pleasant spot that we Centurions came to know John best, enjoyed his abundant hospitality and looked at the remarkable pictures that his photographer wife made.

The best known of the inventions he developed was the "Dorr thickener." "Thickening" is defined in the Van Nostrand Scientific Encyclopedia as "the settling out, by gravity, of the solid material in a slurry, followed by the mechanical removal of the settled (thickened) solid." Miners will tell you that this is an extremely important process in the extraction of metals from their ore. When John Dorr first devised his techniques for this he worked with gold and salvaged far more of the precious metal than had been recovered theretofore from marginal ores. Later, his thickeners and "classifiers" were used in many industries and they also became valuable in the treatment of sewage.

From mining equipment he went as far afield as the design of apparatus for sugar manufacture, one of his patents being for a process of "clarification of cane sugar juice." In addition, in many other kinds of chemical industry, his name was a byword. An editorial in the magazine Chemical Engineering said of him: "The contribution which his inventions . . . have made to mankind are probably greater than those of any other chemical or metallurgical engineer of our times." Yet Dorr, in describing his inventions, used to say that they were children of necessity rather than the result of elaborate research and technical knowledge.

In point was his experience in early days with a small cyanide mill in the Black Hills of South Dakota. He had put his last cent into this mill. To keep it going he had to find some means of revenue. It was a series of experiments with this mill that led to the method of gold extraction that paid back all that he had put into it and more.

John Dorr was born in Newark, New Jersey, and educated at a private school conducted by his mother after his father's death. She encouraged his interest in collections of geological specimens. At seventeen he entered Edison's West Orange laboratory. After considerable practical experience there, during which he kept much the same sort of hours as his boss, he acquired the same passionate devotion to experiment and innovation. For higher technical education he went to Rutgers and graduated from there in 1894. His first independent work was in Colorado and South Dakota and, in 1907, he opened an office in Denver to market his inventions. He organized The Dorr Cyanide Machinery Company in Denver in 1910 and The Dorr Company in 1916 which had international subsidiaries and agencies.

When in 1940 he established The Dorr Foundation for the purpose of assisting education, he said: "During my active life as an engineering executive, the increasing part played by catalysts in modern industry suggested that the Foundation might play the role of using resources largely of brains and imagination." These, he believed, were the greatest catalysts of engineering achievement.

A special interest in later years was highway safety. He initiated the painting of the edges of pavements on such roads as the Merritt Parkway in Connecticut. It was estimated that this device brought a 50 percent decline in accidents on certain highways.

Dorr was a member of the Franklin Institute, the Council of New York Technical Societies, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and a fellow of the New York Academy of Science. He was Member Emeritus of the Electrochemical Society and a member of the Society of Chemical Industry of London.

He was awarded the John Scott Medal of the Franklin Institute, the James Douglas Medal of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, and, for his achievements in chemistry, the Perkin Medal. He has been given honorary degrees by six universities and technical schools.

John Dorr loved life and all its good things such as the Century. In his more than forty years of membership, he came as often as he could to our monthly meetings and had many friends in the Club.

Frederick Sherwood Dunn

Ted Dunn, as his friends called him, was an authority on international law and international affairs. He wrote many books and monographs on national defense and military policy, diplomacy, international organization, comparative politics, and political, social, and economic modernization.

At Yale, he conducted the Center of International Studies until Princeton invited him to join its faculty. Princeton was Dunn's alma mater and he welcomed the opportunity to serve it. By that time, he had gained such a grasp of the Center's policies and it had become so dependent on him for its administration that when he went to Princeton he took it with him.

The results of the Center's research have often been useful to the State and other departments of the Federal government. Also, under Dunn's guidance, the quarterly journal World Politics has exerted much influence.

Beneath a quiet, unassuming manner, Frederick Dunn maintained unyielding firmness in acts of whose rightness he was convinced. It is believed that his transfer of the Center from Yale to Princeton was an instance of this. His wise counsel was widely sought among business organizations as well as in Washington and overseas. He had long planned to write on the qualities and preparation needed for the foreign service and it is possible that his notes will prove useful to a writer who wishes to complete this work.

Dunn was a devoted Centurion and his many friends in the Club remember the wit and humor with which he savored life. He was a member for twenty years.

Kendall Emerson

A friend who was once a boy patient of Dr. Emerson remembers his old-fashioned office in Worcester with its dark-paneled, high-ceilinged waiting room in which he spent many apprehensive moments. But he also remembers how his fears faded when he faced the doctor; how his nerves were quieted when the busy man took the time, before he examined him, to talk to him about things that had nothing to do with the boy's trouble.

Kendall Emerson was busy all his life in his efforts to relieve what was once the greatest scourge of all peoples, tuberculosis. He did this not only in his practice but also and very largely in administering promotion campaigns for preventive programs, rehabilitation movements, examination routines in the war drafts, and for the financing of all of these. Throughout the depression, when many national agencies were suffering severe losses, he managed to keep up the sale of Christmas Seals so that the operations of the National Tuberculosis Association and its state affiliates need never be suspended. The value of his assistance toward the decrease in the death toll of this dread disease throughout the world is one of the imponderables of medical history; it can never be calculated, but the informed guesses are high.

Perhaps Emerson's greatest reassurance to a society confused and frightened by this "white plague" was his conviction, reiterated in many public statements, that tuberculosis was preventable. But he also blamed society for permitting living conditions that increased and spread the disease, saying that "every death from tuberculosis is evidence of man's inhumanity to man."

Kendall Emerson was born in Northampton, Massachusetts, in 1876. He graduated from Amherst in 1897 and received his M.D. four years later from Harvard Medical School. His first practice was in orthopedic and general surgery in Worcester. In 1916, he served in medical units with the British army in France and Belgium and with the American Expeditionary Force in 1918 and 1919. The two following years, he was deputy commissioner and medical director for the American Red Cross in the Balkans and in Siberia. He was decorated by the Rumanian government and the Polish Red Cross.

When he returned to America, he served for five years as chief of surgical services at Worcester's Memorial Hospital and as president of the Massachusetts Tuberculosis League. He then became director of the National Tuberculosis Association. In the next twenty years, he was instrumental in the growth of the tuberculosis control movement from 1,750 local and state affiliates to 3,000, and in the inclusion in the Association's program of rehabilitation, industrial education, extensive adult education, and a separate division for research.

During the Second World War, Dr. Emerson supported a bill for the establishment of a tuberculosis control division in the United States Public Health Service, and this was enacted into law in 1944. Later, he served as a member of an advisory health group appointed by the State Department to make recommendations for a World Health Organization in accordance with a United Nations resolution.

Because of the war, he postponed his retirement and, in 1948, he became president of the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association. Until his final retirement in 1955, he was a general medical adviser to Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston.

A memorial to Kendall Emerson in the London Chest and Heart Bulletin gives him this tribute: "Kendall Emerson was an impressive advocate with great reserves of wisdom and more than a hint of mischievous amusement in his eyes. Never have the finest American qualities of integrity, efficiency and humour been embodied more happily in one man."

Chauncey Lee Fenton

As the First World War progressed it became obvious that traditional subjects of military instruction would have to be replaced. Analysis of Civil War battles which for many years had been part of the student training at the United States Military Academy and other army schools was no longer useful in view of the air observation and bombing, the replacement of cavalry by motor units, and the use of tanks and poison gas—among other innovations—that were changing the nature of warfare.

To meet the new technological needs a lot of overhauling of curricula became imperative. West Point was lucky in getting Colonel Chauncey Fenton to help bring its teaching up to date. Fenton had been an ordnance officer of the Second Army during the Saint Mihiel and Meuse Argonne offensives and at war's end was an instructor in the Fort Monroe Coast Artillery School. Experience in the field under the altered conditions and in a highly technical branch of the service plus a native aptitude for mathematics and applied sciences and a gift for imparting his knowledge to others made him an ideal professor.

With the even newer and more complex techniques of the Second World War came a new challenge, and Fenton, who had become a permanent professor with the rank of general, completely rebuilt the military academy's educational program. His particular subjects were chemistry, electricity, and mathematics. During the war, he arranged for the construction of a completely modern electronics laboratory and a radar laboratory at West Point.

Chauncey Fenton was born at Edinburgh, Pennsylvania, eighty-two years ago. His secondary education was at Lowellville, Ohio, and he entered West Point with the class of 1904 in 1900. He graduated 15th in a class of 124. As a second lieutenant of artillery, he served for a time in the Philippines and began his teaching career as an instructor in mathematics at West Point in 1906. Until 1917, he alternated teaching with work with troops; in the First World War, he served on the General Staff and rose to the rank of colonel.

Fenton loved the Century and, as long as his health let him, he came often to the Club for lunch or monthly dinners. A younger Centurion who was with him in various army posts remembers his special kindness which took no account of difference in rank. At the Century he was known as a conversationalist on many subjects remote from his profession. He spent much time in our library, where he read widely.

Hugh Ferriss

of his death. His contribution to the order of the Flying Fish was poetry, poignant poetry that made even these normally boisterous extroverts thoughtful for a while. He recited his poetry so quietly that attention was focused on the poetry, not on the speaker. This was in the large dining room on the fourth floor of the Century used for the meeting of the Digressionists, with their amateur nudes and landscapes hung along the walls and the Delano-Greenley Bowl on the table."

It was not for his poems—"technically perfect and emotionally exquisite in their subdued sadness"—that Hugh was most celebrated. Indeed, only a few Digressionists and close friends knew that he was a poet. But architects all over the world knew of the stimulus he had given to architecture. A Centurion colleague believes that he "influenced my generation of architects more than any other man, Howells, Hood and Corbett not excepted." Yet it was not as a practicing architect that he made his great contribution. It was through his visualization of the concepts of other architects and of his own—expositions in charcoal with brilliant contrasts of light and dark—that designs were brought to life and served to excite the imaginations of their creators and of those who should build them. His own imagination has been called "fantastic"—an inadequate word for a fancy that moved in so spiritual an orbit.

Hugh's towers and fairy-tale structures may have been difficult or impossible for builders with feet of clay to crystallize in steel and masonry, but they presented avatars—something perhaps unattainable to work toward. They were, indeed, as many architects recognized, the work of a graphic artist who was also a poet.

Hugh was trained as an architect and so understood the basic rules and equations of the profession. But he soon abandoned practice in favor of the dramatic drawing that taught architects to see how their work, still in the planning stage, would look when it had passed that stage.

Some of his best known studies were his panoramic views of Philadelphia's proposed Sesqui-Centennial Exposition, his drawings for the New York World's Fair in 1939—especially a night view of the Trylon and Perisphere—for the United Nations building, and most recently for the 1964 World's Fair. There were also his compositions showing what was possible in the massing of great New York buildings under the zoning laws of the 1920s. Centurions remember his rendering of buildings in the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts which were on view in our gallery.

Hugh's work has been exhibited all over the world and several volumes have been devoted exclusively to his drawings. He has been recognized by the National Academy of Design which made him an academician and by the American Institute of Architects of which he was a fellow. For two years he was president of the New York Chapter of the Institute and its members will not forget his rousing inaugural address—the outstanding event of the Institute's convention of 1952. He was also president of the Architectural League and was the author of Metropolis of Tomorrow (1929) and Power in Buildings (1953).

Hugh was a devoted Centurion; he came frequently to lunch at the Club, served on the Committee on Admissions and, just before his death, on the Board of Management. In 1960, he made the address of welcome to new members. We shall long remember his wit, his friendliness, his deep resonant voice, and the magnetism of his presence which drew us toward him whenever he came among us.

Guy Stanton Ford

A Centurion who knew him well writes: "For a quarter century, Guy Stanton Ford was one of the most deeply respected statesmen in higher education in America. Great universities called on him to survey their programs of instruction, trustees consulted him about new college presidents, and the American Council on Education depended upon his voice in deciding many matters of policy affecting all higher education in the country."

Ford's special interest as a historian in modern Europe and particularly in Germany led to his appointment to the United States Committee of Public Information—the celebrated Creel committee—in the First World War. His specific service there was as chief of civilian and educational publications. This work developed his talents as an editor and as an administrator—gifts which were important to his later life.

Yet history was his first love. He conceived it as concerned with the total experience of mankind; its study must therefore involve many disciplines including the sciences. This opened before him a vista over the entire field of knowledge, and when he became a practical educator his concept posed a vast number and variety of teaching problems.

Guy Stanton Ford was born in Salem, Wisconsin, in 1873. As a boy, his eagerness for the best education he could get led him into sacrifices essential to his schooling. To put himself through Upper Iowa University and the University of Wisconsin, he worked as a farm hand, as a janitor, as a newspaper reporter, and as a teacher in a public school. He did graduate work at the Universities of Wisconsin, Marburg, and Berlin. He received his doctorate from Columbia in 1903.

His career in higher education began at Yale and the University of Illinois. In 1913, he was appointed professor and chairman of the history department at the University of Minnesota. Later, he became the university's dean and, in 1938, its president. At Minnesota, he had much to do with the development of the university press, the Mayo Foundation for Medical Education, and the Institute of Child Development and Welfare.

After he retired in 1941, he engaged in work of national importance. For twelve years, he was connected with the American Historical Association, first as executive secretary, then as president and editor of the American Historical Review. He was also a member of The Literary Society of Washington.

Guy Ford was an infrequent visitor to the Century but he cherished his membership and when he was in New York he lunched at the Long Table. He especially enjoyed our centennial pageant in 1947. He was a member for one-third of his life of ninety years.

Edward Shepard Hewitt

A cousin of our late engaging Centurion jack of all trades, Edward Ringwood Hewitt, Edward S. was an architect, etcher, and painter, devoted to what he believed to be the highest standards of those vocations. In his hopes for the integrity of New York City's skyline, he was aware, too, of the conflicting forces. The sense of this duality is evident in the many etchings and paintings he made from such points of view as bridges, tugboats, and ferryboats, and some of his paintings done from some high place looking down at the island's turmoil are said to be reminiscent of Greco's "Toledo." But he believed always in the promise of beauty in Manhattan.

In architecture, Edward Hewitt specialized in schools and private houses. The High Schools of Southampton, Long Island, and Lake George, New York, are products of his design. So is the Millbrook School for Boys.

Hewitt was born in Brooklyn eighty-four years ago. He was educated at Columbia College and received his Bachelor of Science degree in 1897, and four years later Columbia University's architectural degree. After some three years of study in France and Italy, he began his independent practice in New York.

He was especially interested in architectural education and was honored for his work in this direction by the American Institute of Architects in 1937. During his service as trustee of The Beaux Arts Institute he helped start a number of student competitions in architectural schools in the United States.

In his later years he spent some time at the artists' colony in Elizabethtown, New York, where he became warm friends with Centurions whose acquaintance he had made at our Round Table. Here he delighted us with his stories about fishing and other hobbies. He was with us for thirty-four years.

Charles Hopkinson

When the portraits of his brilliant one-man show were hung in our gallery ten years ago, the artist, who had supervised the hanging, stood in the center and looked round the room and his face was suddenly illumined by surprise. "Why," he said, "I'm a better painter than I thought I was!" Other Centurion artists also thought Charlie Hopkinson was an extremely good painter and, what is more, said so out loud, which is a tribute from these frankly critical persons. "His portraits," said one, "revealed the souls of his sitters; he understood his subjects, and depicting them, infused them with life." Another, who suggested that portrait painting is often a mere bread and butter business, said that it became a fine art in Hopkinson's hands and under his spirited imagination.

Charles Hopkinson was a joyous man; a kind, gentle, and gay person with peace of mind. His technical skill began when he first looked at a prospective sitter; intuitively he knew precisely how to pose his subject so as to present his subtler qualities—perhaps those that were not always visible. From looking at one of his portraits one knew instantly not merely how the subject appeared but the tone and pitch of his voice, whether he was voluble or laconic, an extrovert or one whose mind turned in upon himself. In these revelations Hopkinson achieved special success in his portraits of Calvin Coolidge, James Bryant Conant, and Chauncey Tinker.

Hopkinson was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1869. He graduated from Harvard in 1891 and studied painting in New York, Boston, and Paris. By the end of the First World War, his work was so well known that he was chosen a member of a small group of artists commissioned to paint the portraits of signers of the Versailles Treaty. These are in the Smithsonian Institution. Meanwhile he was represented in many college museums including those of Harvard, Yale, Cornell, and Brown.

His most widely known portraits are those of Presidents

Coolidge and Hoover, Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., John Masefield, and Presidents Eliot, Lowell, and Conant of Harvard. His paintings are in the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Brooklyn Museum, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and the Field Museum in Chicago. Besides his portraits he did water color landscapes; some of his finest were of New Zealand.

He was a member of the National Academy, a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the National Association of Portrait Painters, and the Massachusetts Historical Society.

He was a Centurion for forty-two of his ninety-three years.

Hu Shih

East and West met in the person of Hu Shih. Centurions remember becoming immediately and personally conscious of this meeting in the talk he gave us after his China had fallen victim to the Communist revolution and his one-time acquaintance, Mao Tse-tung, had become its dictator. But, in his seventy years, Hu Shih had seen more than one revolution. The first was when China broke away from Manchu feudalism. His fundamental convictions were never shaken by the upheavals. Throughout, he believed in the dignity, the rights, and the freedom of man—no matter how cheap or expendable human life may have become in the tragic intervals.

Scholar, author, philosopher, and statesman, Dr. Hu has left his mark in the extremes of the earth. He received his bachelor's degree from Cornell and his doctorate from Columbia; he taught in Peking; he was involved in political conflict in Taiwan and in diplomatic good will in Washington. He was as instrumental as any man of his time in bringing understanding of Chinese culture to Western scholars through his writings in the language of the people. Like Chaucer and Dante who brought literature from the traditional Latin into the vernaculars of their native lands, Hu Shih wrote in pai hua, the Chinese vulgate. In recognition of this achievement he has been called the "father of the Chinese literary renaissance."

Dr. Hu was born in Shanghai in 1891. He was the son of Hu Chuan, a geographer. His mother was an illiterate peasant. Though his early childhood was spent in what he called an "idolatrous environment" replete with images of "fierce gods" he had, by the time he came of age, gravitated toward the intellectuals who were trying to adjust to the new influx of Western learning. These young men talked interminably about such Western concepts as Darwin's theory of evolution. The Hu boy was so impressed by this that he chose "Shih" as his second name because Shih means fitness, and he wanted to be among the fittest who should survive.

A Boxer Indemnity Scholarship enabled him to go to Cornell. There he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and graduated in 1914. At Columbia he presented a dissertation entitled "Development of Logical Method in Ancient China," and received his Ph.D. in 1917.

His philosophy was more in harmony with the ways of modern Western civilization than with the ancient forms of oriental mysticism. He believed, for example, in the spirituality of the technology that relieves man of physical burdens so that he may have leisure for contemplation. He had no sympathy with the exploitation of human beings in physical labor for the benefit of a few; his frank criticism of Eastern civilizations for this and for their toleration of poverty and disease earned him unpopularity in his homeland but he was equally at odds with the Communists who had introduced totalitarian government.

He served as Chinese ambassador to the United States from 1938 to 1942. When war came with Japan, he returned to China to join Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek in Chungking. He remained there for a time after the Communists took over and tried to make peace with the new government, but he persisted in criticizing its dictatorial methods. Eventually, after one of his sons had joined the Communists, he went to New York and remained there until 1958 when he accepted the directorship of the Academia Sinica, a research center at Taipei.

A Centurion who knew him well speaks of him as "a congenial and enjoyable companion . . . the attractive Chinese gentleman-scholar-diplomat of western affiliations in mind and spirit."

Stanley Meyer Isaacs

The death of Stanley Isaacs only a few months after his election to the Century has saddened us. He had many friends here, but many more would have been proud and glad to know him had they had the chance. He was sensitive and understanding, he was warm and witty too, indeed he had the best Centurion qualities. He is "fun to talk to," wrote a sponsor of his candidacy, "he listens to the other fellow; he presents his viewpoint quietly and modestly . . . and has an outlook on every conceivable subject."

His public career was part of New York City's government. Like all public servants he often presented a controversial figure. For one thing he was a Republican—something of a rarity in the city's political pattern. As one columnist said, his was a voice of constructive opposition and a highly articulate minority voice. He could enrage his opponents as well as some of his supporters but all respected his stubborn integrity.

As a Herald-Tribune editorial told, "he had a deep love for the city, for its people, and for the principles which he believed should animate them." The editorial called him "Mr. New York." To the Times, he was "Warrior for the People."

Stanley Isaacs was born in 1882 and lived all his life in a single district of Manhattan—what is now the Ninth Assembly District. He was the grandson of a rabbi and was constantly active in Jewish philanthropy. He was educated at Sachs Collegiate Institute, Columbia College, and the New York Law School. He began practice in 1905 with the family law firm, M.S. and I. S. Isaacs.

He first showed his concern with politics at sixteen when he joined his district Republican Club. In 1912 he supported Theodore Roosevelt and the Bull Moose Party. In the First World War he was the head of his local draft board.

His first city interest was in slum clearance and his successful efforts in pressing for the enactment of the Multiple Dwelling Law, which was an important step toward housing improvement, brought him to the attention of reformers. In the second administration of La Guardia, he was elected borough president of Manhattan.

His independence of popular shibboleths soon got him in trouble. His appointment of a Communist to his staff led to a refusal by the Republican organization to renominate him as borough president, but he was elected to the City Council on an independent ticket. He remained on the Council from 1943 to 1961. Party men called him a maverick because he was supported by such liberal organizations as the Americans for Democratic Action. It is true that his behavior sometimes dismayed rigidly partisan Republicans, but Isaacs was more devoted to reform and good government than to strict party dogma. In politics, as the Times said, "conservatives called him a radical and radicals thought of him as a conservative." He himself believed he was a conservative in the original rather than the "rightist" sense—working to conserve all that was most useful to society.

LeRoy Elwood Kimball

The chief financial officer of a large university—called, usually, "controller"—holds a highly demanding job. Roy Kimball's friends wondered how, while he was spectacularly successful in that position, he was equally busy with educational, historical, language, real estate, book collecting, antiquarian, gardening, and other activities.

Looking first at his exigent vocation, we find that during his forty-five years as officer of New York University—he was also vice-chancellor—the annual operating budget grew from $450,000 to $33,000,000. Yet, with the large expansion these figures imply, he kept the university solvent in and out of depressions, in times of tribulation as in those of prosperity, and with all the vicissitudes of changing money values. He acquired, too, for the university, land and buildings.

Among his extracurricular positions were the presidencies of the Modern Language Association, the Association of American Colleges, the Bibliographical Society of America, the New York Historical Society, the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, and the Rockland County Historical Society. He was chairman and founder of the Stony Point Battlefield Museum and he served on the New York State Commission to Survey Scenic, Historic and Commercial Assets of the Hudson River Valley.

That valley and the hills that formed it made the principal stamping ground of Kimball and his wife. In Stony Point township, they purchased their place and called it "Journey's End." There Roy showed his talents as an amateur forester, gardener, and landscape architect. What spare time he had, he spent at his wife's family home in England.

LeRoy Kimball was born in Flint, Michigan, and educated at Albion College in that state and at New York University, which gave him his M.A. in 1917. In 1910, he began what he supposed would be a journalist's career when he became city editor of the Albion Evening Record, but New York University soon drew him away and made him its assistant bursar. He soon became bursar, then controller, and, a score of years later, vice-chancellor.

He was an eager antiquarian and collected books, furniture, and other objects of early Americana.

He was a Centurion for nearly twenty-five years.

Oswald Whitman Knauth

One day a young man, strolling through the rug and carpet department of R. H. Macy's big New York store, noticed that one of the prospective customers could not get the attention of any of the busy salesmen. She was a colored woman and the young man wondered if, perhaps, she was not considered a profitable prospect for that reason. He spoke to her and it appeared she wanted to buy an oriental rug whose price was $8,500. She ordered the rug and asked if he was a salesman. "No," he replied, "but I am an employee of the store and I can take care of you." He did not tell her that he was the company's executive vice-president. He recorded the incident and it never happened again.

Oswald Knauth was always doing things like that. His vice-presidency never kept him at a desk. In every department, he saw quickly what, if anything, was wrong and corrected it. He was as quick to commend the head of a department where everything was right. He talked to everyone about their problems and treated them with sympathy and humor.

Oswald got his job at Macy's not because he was an expert retail salesman but because he was an economist and, still in his mid-thirties, of high standing. He had been an instructor and assistant professor of economics at Princeton and an editorial writer on the New York Evening Post. He had written a book on industrial policy and collaborated on another on national income.

In the 1930s, he was best known for his expertness in training young men to become executives and for his intuition in appraising special capacities or aptitudes in people. An instance of this quick, sure guessing was his telling a boy on the crew of the schooner on which he spent his spare time that the lad was too good for the job. "If you don't quit," Oswald told the boy, "I'll fire you." A few years later, the sailor had become a prosperous contractor and is forever grateful for the advice.

Oswald was born in New York in 1887; he graduated from Harvard College in 1909 and received his Ph.D. from Columbia in 1913. He taught at Princeton for three years and was on the Post until America's entrance into the First World War. During the war he was a first lieutenant of artillery. In the first post-war years he was a member of the staff of the National Bureau of Economic Research. He joined R. H. Macy and Company in 1922. He retired from business in 1934 but not from work. Immediately he became Mayor La Guardia's director of emergency relief in New York. When he finished this job he became president of the Associated Dry Goods Corporation. In the Second World War, he was assistant director of the War Production Board, consultant to the Quartermaster General, and consultant to the Army Supply Forces. At war's end he lectured on economics at Columbia.

Oswald's favorite recreation was cruising, and as he grew older he spent more and more time on his boat. He also took up painting and exhibited in several of the Century's amateur shows. When he was in New York he was at the Club almost daily and was one of the most enthusiastic and best loved Centurions.

He had such a slow and quiet way of speaking that one did not at first recognize his alertness and keen awareness of everything that was going on; sometimes, too, his quick humor came as a surprise. He never accepted economics as in any degree an exact science, and in his talk as in his books he was always conscious of the flexibility of its theories or doctrines. He was with us nearly forty years.

Kenneth Mielziner MacKenna

"He was wise, warm, friendly and urbane and there couldn't have been a better companion for an evening's chat.

He was highly regarded by all the Professional Theatre here in New York." So speaks a Centurion friend of Kenneth MacKenna; a friend who is also of the theatre and knows it well. MacKenna was an actor and a director; he was also head of a scenario department in Hollywood. "He acquitted himself with great distinction in this post," writes another Centurion colleague and friend, of his motion picture career, "and was regarded with enormous esteem by various publishers and editors during the Golden Era of talking pictures. On the personal side, I regarded him as a man of great warmth and sensitivity and understanding."

MacKenna began life as Leo Mielziner, Jr. He took the stage name of Kenneth MacKenna from his mother's family name at the time of his first contract with the producer William A. Brady. He was born in Canterbury, New Hampshire, the son of Leo Mielziner, the late portrait painter, and Mrs. Ella MacKenna Friend Mielziner, a Paris journalist.

His first performance on Broadway was in the play "At 9.45" in 1919. Among the plays in which he acted in the 1920s was James Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows" with Helen Hayes in 1926. In the thirties, he acted in two Shakespeare plays, "Othello" and "Macbeth." In 1939, he left the stage for the movies, became scenario director for MGM and eventually its studio's editorial director, in which post he selected stories for picture production and edited the screen plays.

In 1959, he returned to Broadway to play the lead in "The Highest Tree." In the last year of his life he gave some television performances and acted in the motion picture "Judgment at Nuremberg."

Unhappily he was a Centurion for only a year before his untimely death so that few of us came to know him.

Frederick Hill Meserve

One of our senior Centurions, Frederick Meserve died at the age of ninety-six. For forty of his years, he had been a member of the Century. By vocation, he was a business executive; in his avocation, he was one of the great amateurs of our time. His devotion was to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. Along with that was his preoccupation with the memory of his own father who had risen from private in the Thirty-Fifth Massachusetts Infantry to major under General Burnside in the Civil War. Frederick Meserve himself had been born only a few months after that war ended. Fortunately, his father had kept a diary and by the time the boy was grown he knew it almost by heart.

When he was a young man, he found, one day, at an inconsequential auction, a package tied with a string. He bought it for $1.10 and discovered that it contained a hundred or more prints of pictures illustrating the war. Many of them were photographs taken by the great Matthew Brady. These coincided with the aim which he had developed of illustrating his father's diary. From this chance purchase his lifelong work of collecting Civil War treasures and Lincolniana had its inception. His vast collection has provided source material for every historian of the period.

In the early 1900s, Meserve bought 10,000 original Brady negatives. Among them were seven portrait photographs of Lincoln. He added to these 75,000 photographs of Americans who were famous theatrical figures in the post-1860 years of the nineteenth century, so that he was able to present historians with much cultural as well as political source material. Eventually there were some 200,000 portraits of the important men and women of the period in his collection.

A Centurion who is one of our most gifted American historians says of Frederick Meserve: "He was a combination of research worker, essayist, artist and dealer, who, by uniting these various vocations and avocations, did a great service to all students of American history in the period of sectional upheaval."

Meserve has also been described as "a genial friend and host, whose home, crammed with negatives and positives upon the Civil War and Lincoln, was always open to visiting scholars." Sculptors who modeled heads and figures of Lincoln for coins or other purposes always sought out the Meserve collection before they began work. Remembering these artists, Meserve once said: "I have known well and aided Adolph A. Weinman, Gutzon Borglum, Charles Keck, Truman H. Bartlett and Daniel Chester French. I have visited their studios and entered into their dreams."

Frederick Meserve was born in Boston on November 1, 1865. He graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1892. As a young man his favorite exercise was walking. When he was twenty, he walked from Colorado Springs to Pike's Peak and back, a distance of some forty miles in under twelve hours. An enthusiastic golfer always, he won, in 1946, the United States Senior Golf Association Award for members over eighty.

He has published Photographs of Abraham Lincoln in a limited edition and a twenty-eight volume set of Historical Portraits, which contains 8,000 photographs of the contemporaries of Lincoln. This, too, was first published in a limited edition, but later with the collaboration of Carl Sandburg came out in a trade edition.

Through generations of historians in the future, we shall come to know more and more of Lincoln and of the war that nearly destroyed the Union when new discoveries are made in the inexhaustible depths of the Meserve collection.

Barret Montfort

A restless, roving solitary, we saw little of Barret Montfort at the Century in the nearly twenty years of his membership. Those who knew him and often wanted to see him had difficulty in discovering to what remote spot he had disappeared at any given moment—leaving no trace. As likely as not he would be en route—perhaps even round the world—and so, inaccessible.

Montfort was educated at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, from which he graduated in 1913, and at the University of Virginia and Harvard law schools. In the First World War, he was an officer in the Engineer Corps of the Army in France. In 1920, he joined the National Chemical Bank of New York and became a vice-president in charge of the fiduciary division. He left New York to become an official in the London branch of the bank.

When the Second World War broke out in 1939, he tried to get into the British army. When he was unsuccessful, he migrated to Canada in the hope of getting into the war via the Canadian armed forces, but, though he took out Canadian citizenship believing that this would help him, he failed there too, presumably because of his age.

Settling, for a while, in Vancouver, he engaged in various real estate projects and became an extensive land owner. He was interested in growing holly and developed an active and profitable business in exporting it to markets in the United States. He was a musical enthusiast with a special attachment to the Wagner operas.

During his last long illness he was back in New York, but few of his acquaintances knew that he was at the Columbia Presbyterian hospital because he could not bear to be fussed over and he dreaded sympathy visits. He died there, leaving no surviving relatives.

Hobart Nichols

We who knew him in late years were amazed at the courage, the relaxed humor, and the incessant alertness and curiosity of this artist who had been deprived through failing sight of the means of his work. In his ninety-third year, Hobart knew as much as most of us and more than many of us about what was going on in the world; he was as amused and provoked by the oddities of human and social behavior as a young man. Happily for Centurions, he was able to come, almost daily, to our Round Table where he gave us both ideas and inspiration. Because he compensated for his loss by a sharpening of his other faculties, we were rarely conscious of his infirmity. His hearing, for example, was extremely sensitive; it was, too, highly selective—he knew by our voices those of us that he could not see.

It is, of course, easier than it once was to keep up by ear with the news. But Hobart also found a way to enjoy books. He was one of the first to take advantage of the reading phonograph records put out for the blind under the auspices of the Library of Congress. He “read” book after book in this way and was thus able to take an active part in whatever critical literary conversations went on among us. And he was always urging Centurion authors to try to get their books put on records so that he might talk about writing to its creators. The one thing he could not do was what, perhaps, he wanted most—to look at pictures and to make them. But these things he never said; we may only guess at what took place in his unclouded mind.

Henry Hobart Nichols, Jr. was born in Washington, D.C., in 1869. He was educated at Shortlidge College of Pennsylvania and received his art training at Washington's Art Students League and at Julian's Academy in Paris. In Paris he studied under Castellucho. From the Society of Washington Artists he won prizes for his paintings in 1901, 1902, and 1904, was awarded the bronze medal of the National Arts Club of New York in 1914, the club's silver medal four years later and its cash prize in 1923. In the same year he won the Second Altman Prize of the National Academy of Design, and, in 1925, the First Altman Prize. For ten years from 1939, he was president of the National Academy of Design. In earlier days in Paris he had served as assistant director of fine arts to the 1901 exhibition there. He was at one time trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Hobart was elected to the Century in 1928. He has served on our Board of Management.

We shall miss him, but his bravery has been contagious and his example will stay with us.

Charles Devens Osborne

(Memorial prepared for the 1962 Yearbook but omitted by an unfortunate accident.)

Rarely does a man running for office let a newspaper he owns oppose him. But when Charles Osborne was a candidate for mayor of Auburn, New York, it suited the editorial policy of his Auburn Advertiser-Journal to support his opponent. It is a tribute to Charles's sense of fairness that he made no effort to influence his employee, the editor.

Auburn has long been the headquarters of the Osborne clan. It was there that Charles's father, Centurion Thomas Mott Osborne, achieved his great renown as a pioneer prison reformer. Charles and his brothers grew up there; their father taught them reading, music, amateur theatricals, and ethics. For Charles, Auburn seemed to be in his blood; he never left it, and he had an enduring influence on its politics, its journalism, and its institutions—literary and charitable.

He was named for his great-uncle, Charles Devens, the Massachusetts Civil War general, and this gave his mind, even as a child, a military slant. At fourteen, he was chosen to unveil the equestrian statue of his uncle that stood in front of the courthouse in Worcester, Massachusetts. Though he never became a professional soldier, he served in the New York National Guard on the Mexican border and was a combat machine gun officer in France in the First World War. In the Second World War he was appointed colonel in the New York Guard.

Born at Auburn in 1888, he graduated from Harvard in 1910. In Cambridge he met and later married the daughter of Centurion Barrett Wendell, Harvard's colorful professor of literature. In 1913, he began his journalistic career as editorial writer on his father's paper, The Auburn Citizen. In 1926, he succeeded his father as president of the paper. His first term as mayor of Auburn ran from 1927 to 1931; his second, from 1935 to 1939. He was of the third generation of Osbornes to be mayor of the town. Between his terms he was a member of the New York State Emergency Relief Administration. This was operated under Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt and set the pattern for later New Deal thinking in this field—partly because of the membership in it of Harry Hopkins.

Charles Osborne's civic duties kept him from The Century most of the time, but he was proud of the membership he shared with his father, his father-in-law, and his brother.

Charles Russell Lowell Putnam

The Century tradition of longevity was maintained by Dr. Putnam who lived to be 92. He asserted his independence at the age of ten by running away from his Massachusetts home to be discovered later in Nova Scotia and returned by the authorities there. He graduated from Harvard College in 1891 and received his M.D. degree four years later from Harvard Medical School. After some post-graduate study in London and Vienna he served his internship at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. Later he was on the staff of Lincoln Hospital and was a consultant at Martha's Vineyard Hospital in Vineyard Haven, Massachusetts.

During the First World War, he and his wife adopted seven children of underprivileged backgrounds. He was at that time interested in children's diseases and was assistant surgeon in the babies' ward at what is now University Hospital. Most of the adopted children were in ill health, having come from various institutions. At his Martha's Vineyard home, he restored them.

Dr. Putnam was a grandnephew of James Russell Lowell.

Thomas Milton Rivers

Occasionally, a man will keep going even after the doctors have given him up. It seems to be sheer will-power—a refusal to die. When Thomas Rivers was still in his twenties, a physical check-up showed him to have an "invariably fatal" disease. He was then at the end of his second year at Johns Hopkins School of Medicine. He decided to become as useful as possible in the few months that he was told remained to him and got himself an appointment in the San Tomás Hospital in Panama. In eighteen months there, in spite of his short training as a doctor, he performed eighty-five operations and a hundred and fifty autopsies. This strenuous work evidently arrested his disease. He returned to Johns Hopkins and finished his course there, graduating in 1915.

Three years later, he began the study that was to become his life work. At that time the spread of various respiratory diseases in the United States was so great that a special mission was created by the government to search for causes. One prevalent malady was a form of pneumonia that appeared to be a complication of measles. Doctor Rivers was asked to take part in the study.

From then on, the greater part of his effort was devoted to the investigation of viruses. He established the difference between viruses and bacteria by showing that a virus required for its survival the presence of live cells, that it could not live and multiply on dead tissues. He developed vaccines that prepared the way for success in the treatment of yellow fever and polio. His research was instrumental in the development of both the Salk and the Sabin vaccines.

Thomas Rivers was born in Jonesboro, Georgia, and was educated at the Middle Georgia Military Academy and Emory College. It was while he was an undergraduate at Emory that a biology professor persuaded him to turn his attention from the arts to the sciences. After the First World War, he joined the staff of the Rockefeller Institute Hospital in New York. In 1937, he was appointed director of the hospital. Meanwhile, he had been elected to the National Academy of Sciences for his achievements in medical research. In 1938, he became chairman of the Virus Research Committee of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

The National Foundation-March of Dimes, of which Dr. Rivers was vice-president for medical affairs, has described him as "a catalyst among scientists, teaching and inspiring and spurring others to enter this branch of medicine and to make their own discoveries." He has been named as one of the six leaders in the United States in the effort to conquer poliomyelitis.

He was a Centurion for nearly a quarter-century.

Henry Richardson Shepley

"The only modern architecture that deserves the name," wrote Harry Shepley, "is found in those fresh creations evolved from a background of tradition. One cannot do traditional architecture now because it is not of our time and is therefore without meaning today. On the other hand, architecture that is revolutionary may be dramatic when first built, but when the novelty wears off there is no quality to sustain it in the test of time to which all architecture must submit."

Harry held to this philosophy in all his designs. Yet it never inhibited his imagination. In such transcendent flights of fancy as that of the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, we see no confinement by formula, yet also no effort at "originality for its own sake," a motive he despised. While he let his buildings fit their time, his views were always long-range so that the structures were also timeless. No future critic will ever say of a Shepley design that it is "quaint" or obsolete.

Perhaps Harry Shepley could not help being an architect. Architecture was in his blood. In any case, he did not resist the hereditary impulse—if there is such a thing. His grandfather was the great Henry Hobson Richardson—a Centurion, of course, elected in 1866. Some of the finest buildings of the Victorian era in America are monuments to his art. The best known, perhaps, is Trinity Church in Boston. He founded the firm which also had, in its title, the name of Bulfinch. It was this firm of which Harry eventually became senior partner.

Harry Shepley was concerned, mainly, with university and college buildings, with a variety of government projects, and with hospital structures. He had full responsibility for the Dunster and Adams Houses at Harvard and a principal part in the restoration of Harvard's Massachusetts Hall, in the design of McKinlock and Strauss dormitories, Vanderbilt Hall for the Medical School, the Fogg Museum, the chapel, the Biology Institute, the Chemistry School and the Indoor Athletic Building, also at Harvard. He designed, too, the new buildings for the Massachusetts General Hospital. He had a part in the firm's undertakings of a medical school for the University of Virginia and a medical center in Cleveland. He built the Orly Airport in France. He was consulting architect to the architect of the United States Capitol, to the United States Public Buildings Administration, the Department of State, and the War Department. He served the American Academy in Rome from 1938 until his death, and was a member of six of its architectural juries.

Henry Shepley was born in Brookline, Massachusetts, and graduated from Harvard College in 1910. In 1914, he received a diploma from the École des Beaux Arts in Paris, having completed the school's course in the shortest time on record. When the United States entered the First World War, he was commissioned first lieutenant in the Air Service Construction Division. In France, he was in charge of a bombing school at Clermont-Ferrand. After the war, he was appointed architect to the Peace Commission. In the Second World War, he served as architect-engineer of the First Corps Area.

Shepley's favorite recreations were sailing in the summer and skiing in the winter. As a means of teaching his four boys to sail, he designed an eight-foot catboat and called its racing category the "rookie class." The idea caught on and some seventy of these boats were built; they still are raced at Marion and Cohasset, Massachusetts.

When he was in New York in the summer, he took special pleasure in going to the Century for dinner and he would sit late on the terrace on warm evenings. A Yankee friend says that "through his personality" Shepley "lifted the status of the entire non-resident Boston Membership."

The honors heaped upon him were high and numerous. Among them were the Legion of Honor, the Gold Medal of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and the honorary degree of Doctor of Arts from Harvard.

We are proud to add the name of Henry Richardson Shepley to our list of architect immortals.

Albert D. Smith

(Every effort was made to secure information about Albert D. Smith, from friends or from other sources, but without success. It is unfortunate that it is therefore impossible to prepare a memorial to him.—R.B.)

Jacob Barstow Smull

When the burned and capsized French liner Normandie lay on her side at her west side pier, Barstow Smull walked through her from bow to stern. It must have been an arduous but exciting experience. He was then chairman of a small committee appointed to investigate the causes of the disasters to the ship. He had been recalled to government service some twenty years after he had been on the Chartering Commission of the Shipping Board under Presidents Wilson and Harding. In the case of the Normandie his group reported that the ship should be salvaged for wartime service with the navy.

Shipping interests had absorbed the Smull family for five generations. Barstow spent most of his life with a firm of steamship agents and brokers. Parallel with his vocation, his hobbies and recreation were also concerned with the sea. He was president of the Cold Spring Harbor Beach Club, an organization maintained primarily for young people and their children. At Cold Spring Harbor, too, he took great interest in the Whaling Museum and gave it his continuing support.

Smull gave as much time as he could spare to philanthropic and civic activities. He was at one time president of the board of Sailors Snug Harbor in Staten Island and he was a former treasurer of the Presbyterian Home for Aged Women. He was a trustee of the Webb Institute of Naval Architecture, the New York City Mission Society, and the Seamen's Bank for Savings. He helped found the Citizens Budget Commission.

A fellow Centurion said of Barstow Smull: "He was a home man, not a club man—accounting for the fact that he was not often at the Century. He loved, especially, his home in the country, his big ornamental trees and Mrs. Smull's flower gardens." He enjoyed small boat racing.

He was a Centurion for twenty-two years.

Eugene Speicher

Gene Speicher loved the Century and the many Centurions who knew him loved and admired him too. We admired him as an artist because he consistently refused to compromise with the stern if imponderable ethics of his profession. His early success as a portrait painter presented the vista of a lucrative career and offered the temptation that must beset all portraitists of conceding to the vanity of the sitter. But Gene would not do this; to him, the beauty of a painting was more important than physical likeness, nor would he ever let the impulse of flattery lead him away from the truth he saw so clearly behind the superficial aspect. He believed, too, that a portrait belonged more to the artist than to the subject—a notion which often escapes the mind of the usual fashionable painter, with the result that neither the artist nor the sitter is present in the finished picture.

As his unique style came to be established, Gene renounced the career of the portrait painter who lives by commissions. He continued to paint portraits when the impulse moved him, as it did in the case of Katharine Cornell when he created one of his most celebrated paintings. But he also devoted much of his effort toward figure pieces, floral still lifes, and landscapes. He became, also, a master of the nude; fellow artists especially admire the way he has kept alive the highest tradition in the study of the human form and its translation into terms of art.

Speicher's own words express with simple clarity his estimate of the artist's intent and performance—a concept he never forgot in his own work.

"An artist," he wrote, "is a distinguished shape maker: varied shapes in three dimensions, his main interest in color is in the coloration of the canvas as a whole. I believe that all art is built on a superstructure of abstract design, upon which and out of which the original idea flowers. In believing this, I am interested in acquiring adequate technical skill and concentration to express myself as clearly as possible. I do not like stuttering or double talk in paint any more than I do in real life. I know of no master who is not a master craftsman."

This passage is part of "My Credo" which served as preface to a little volume of reproductions of Speicher paintings published in 1945 by the American Artists Group of New York. The whole of that brief foreword might well be required reading for the young person who contemplates the profession of painting.

Eugene Speicher was born in Buffalo in 1883. At nineteen, he began the study of painting in the evening at the Buffalo Art School. That he was able to do this after ten hours of daytime work in a lumberyard is testimony to the physical stamina and strong constitution that served him so well in later years. In 1906, an Albright Scholarship enabled him to go to the Art Students League in New York. The following year, he won the Kelley Prize for a portrait of Georgia O'Keefe. He continued his studies under William Merritt Chase and Robert Henri. For a time, he followed the movement known as the "ashcan school" in which his friend George Bellows was a leader, but portraiture drew him away into his first successes. One of his best known portraits was of Bellows's daughter, Jean.

All his life Gene held to his conviction that physical fitness was essential to the best intellectual performance. In his younger days he was an uncommon athlete, especially in sprints and basketball. He kept up his squash long after most of his contemporaries had abandoned strenuous physical exercise. "There is nothing," he is quoted as saying when he was nearly seventy, "quite like some exercise, a swim and a rubdown after a hard morning of painting." He had no use for the bohemian life artists are supposed to enjoy. His habits were regular and controlled. At the same time, he was a connoisseur of food and drink; like all true gourmets he avoided excess.

Eugene Speicher was a Centurion for thirty-five years.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson

Some of Stef's friends—in spite of his persuasive eloquence about the lands he loved—never quite believed him when he talked about the "friendly" Arctic. One reason for their skepticism was the knowledge that Stef himself had been through some of the most grueling adventures that a hostile country and climate could possibly afford. In his exploring days, for example, he had more than once been lost to the world that knew him for many months and given up for dead. Losing his ship on a journey in 1913 he had traveled overland with two companions for 700 miles. They had salvaged some supplies which they put on their single sled drawn by a dog team. Eleven others of their party died. Stef and his sled-mates survived because he had learned how to live as the Eskimos do. He taught the others that they could keep healthy on a diet of nothing but fish and meat—a theory that he later proved to a group of scurvy-prejudiced New York doctors. His account of their struggles for survival leads those of us who, when winter comes, turn our faces southward, to believe that the “friendly” aspect of the Arctic derived in Stef’s case largely from the friendliness of the Eskimos who loved him.

The “myth” that there is anything formidable about the Far North was one of the many fallacies, as he called them, that he exploded. One was that colds come from being chilled or wetting the feet. Another was that exercise is necessary to health. The common belief that there are no vitamins in meat is nonsense. “Of course there are none,” said Stef, “if you cook them all out.”

In the celebrated diet experiment that shocked doctors and dietitians out of their traditional convictions, he submitted to a controlled test in which for a year he ate nothing but meat and fish. Another volunteer went along with him to show that there was nothing idiosyncratic about Stef. At year’s end both were in better health than when they started.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson was known as “Stef” because his first name, in addition to being hard for Americans to pronounce, presented little possibility of being abbreviated into the intimacy his many friends wanted. For, whatever the Arctic may have been, there has never been any doubt of Stef’s friendliness. He gave generously of himself and never tired of advising younger and less experienced men; he was genial as a host and tolerant in spite of his strong convictions.

He was born in Manitoba in 1879. His parents were Icelanders. He was educated at the state universities of North Dakota and Iowa and at Harvard graduate schools. He was, for a time, assistant instructor in anthropology and this work persuaded him to go into the field as investigator. He began in Iceland, then in northern Alaska. In 1908 he went with a scientific party into the Arctic and spent four years living with the Eskimos. During this time he made his celebrated discovery of the blond Eskimos, whom he believed to be descended from the Vikings. After a brief sojourn in America he started on an expedition even more ambitious than his first—financed, this time, by the Canadian government. It was on this trip that he was separated from his ship, which later was wrecked, and made his extraordinary overland trek. He also made important geographical discoveries, putting on the map lands extending eastward for some 150 miles. He also made useful geological surveys.

In 1919, he retired from active exploration and devoted the rest of his life to scientific study and research and to the writing of more than twenty books which are considered the most complete and valuable body of literature about the Far North. His large abundantly illustrated volume, The Friendly Arctic, is considered by many explorers including, and especially, the Russians, as the best guide book ever written on Arctic travel.

After his retirement Stef lived for the most part in New York, where he studied, collected books, and carried on an immense correspondence with scientists all over the world. He acted as adviser to Pan American World Airways and prepared an Arctic Manual which was of great value to the United States government in the Second World War.

In the Century, most of us well remember his commanding figure almost always surrounded by curious and admiring younger members. We are proud to count Stefansson among our immortals.

Burton Egbert Stevenson

How often a Centurion will leave a lunch or dinner table for a hasty check in the library on a companion's quotation! This is not, of course, to settle a bet, for betting in the Club is forbidden in our Constitution, but, perhaps, to crow over a less erudite friend or to eat crow himself. That is why those invaluable reference volumes, The Home Book of Verse and the Home Book of Quotations would have fallen apart long since had they not been securely bound by Centurion Frank Dodd.

A Centurion compiled those books, another published them; that is why they are infallible. Hardly a day passes but some member is momentarily indebted to Burton Stevenson. But some of us, who have worked abroad, have another reason for gratitude: it was he who founded the American Library in Paris, beloved by all sorts and conditions of Americans. That was during the First World War; it is still the mecca for those who like to read or study—even in Paris.

Stevenson's colossal reference books have largely wiped out the memory of his first efforts—detective stories. But those who knew him fifty years ago remember that they were first-rate mysteries—especially The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet, later dramatized and filmed. Perhaps it is not surprising that a man of such varied talents should have had roulette as a hobby. But it fascinated Burton Stevenson and he solemnly maintained that he had a system that was sure to break the bank at Monte Carlo. Whether or not it ever did is not on record, but his friends know that he was a familiar figure at the Casino.

Burton Stevenson was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, and spent most of his life there. His early life was like a Horatio Alger story, though few if any Alger heroes paid off the mortgage on the farm by literary achievement. When Stevenson was twelve, he built a printing press and published The Boy's Own, a monthly magazine. The practice he gained in setting type helped finance his way through Princeton. In later college years he was college correspondent for the New York Tribune and United Press. He left Princeton at the end of his junior year to take a job on a local paper in his home town. This proved too binding for the writing of fiction, so he got work as a librarian and found more leisure for the creation of stories, novels, and juveniles, of which he eventually produced more than forty volumes.

The library work led him naturally into the making of anthologies. This was far more exacting labor than fiction and it changed the whole current of his life. He followed his first two large compilations of quotations by The Home Book of Modern Verse, The Home Book of Shakespeare Quotations, The Home Book of Proverbs, Maxims and Familiar Phrases, and the Home Book of Bible Quotations—a group which should keep Centurions from the awful pitfalls they especially dread, prepared for their salvation by a fellow member. So, if you require a monument to Burton Stevenson, go to the Century Library and look about you.

Out of his rich life of eighty-nine years, he was with us for thirty-two.

Wesley Alba Sturges

As the twentieth century advanced through its second decade there came a divergence between what was taught in the law schools and what was happening in the courts. Students were still being taught only the abstract principles of jurisprudence, at the expense of legal procedure which was thought beneath the notice of the professors. Rebels among the students who called themselves "realists" spoke out against this teaching and in the early 1930s arguments grew hot and heavy between the revolutionaries and those who maintained what Mr. Thurman Arnold has called a "slavish adherence to precedent."

In his teaching at the Yale Law School, Wesley Sturges gave no official countenance to either side in what he considered a mere philosophical debate. But in complete independence, he attacked the problem at its center. He emphasized procedure because he knew that when his students became practicing lawyers, understanding of the courts would be more important to them than a knowledge of abstractions. Thus, while the talk among the students seldom got above the level of a debate, Sturges brought about an educational revolution.

His teaching was practical and realistic, seasoned with humor. Often he would take an absurd stand and spur his students into attacking it. He was expert at calling any bluff and had no patience with pretense. He asked questions continually—not questions to which he knew the answers to find out how much his students had learned, but questions that taxed intelligence. His incessant challenges brought his classrooms alive.

Wesley Sturges was born in Fairfield, Vermont, the son of a Methodist minister. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1915. He was a captain in the First World War. In 1919, he received his law degree from Columbia. After teaching at the law schools of the University of South Dakota and the University of Minnesota, he was appointed to the faculty of Yale Law School and soon became a full professor there. In 1945, he became dean of the school. In the Second World War, he was the Office of Economic Welfare's chief representative in Africa and director of economic aid in Sicily after its liberation.

In 1955 he resigned his post as dean of the Yale Law School but continued to teach both there and at the University of Miami. Six years later, he became dean of the Law School at Miami.

Apart from teaching, Sturges's specialty was arbitration. In this, he is regarded as a pioneer authority. He was at one time chairman of the American Arbitration Association. He also served as a member of the administrative committee of the Motion Picture Arbitration System.

Harold Higgins Swift

Sometimes a businessman is a catalyst that keeps the rest of society going. Though such persons be neither artists, scientists, nor pedagogues themselves, the arts, sciences, and education would languish without their presence. Such men have done much to keep the Century going—such ones as our late loved Stephen Clark—and that they are rare enhances their value to us.

Though he was, for many years, head of Chicago's celebrated Swift and Company and devoted to its welfare, he never let preoccupation with business blur his vision of the world round him, of men and women struggling in the complications of our society or of boys and girls learning to cope with them. Parallel with his leadership of his company's board, he headed the Board of Trustees of Chicago University and gave it equal room in his broad mind. It is supposed that such a position in industry leads a man to try to dominate all he touches; yet as a university trustee Harold Swift left education to the educators, deferring to the academic people even when he disagreed with them, guiding always by suggestion, never by command.

Friends of Swift remember his abundant anonymous help to humbler folk who were out of luck: reaching down into the details of their troubles, but not telling. One friend called him "a modern saint who never let his halo show." Loyalty and modesty were his best known qualities. In business, he was aware not only of its infallible machinery but of its fallible human operatives and he took an active part in employee relations at a time when such exercise was not yet fashionable.

Gustavus Swift, founder of the meat packing concern, had eleven children; Harold was the eleventh. Alone among his six brothers, he went to college before entering the business. The college was, of course, that of the University of Chicago and, in his undergraduate years, he acquired the devotion to the university that later made him one of its most effective trustees.

He served the Red Cross as major in the First World War and worked on a special mission to Russia. Later he became a captain in the adjutant general's department of the army. He entered Swift and Company as a lamb buyer and was also a hog and cattle buyer before he was elected vice-president and director. He became chairman of the board in 1948 and honorary chairman in 1950.

He was the first alumnus of Chicago University to be elected to its board of trustees and he served as chairman of that board for twenty-six years. His other outside activities included the Community Trust, the Sunday Evening Club, and the Art Institute of Chicago, and the Rockefeller Foundation and General Education Board of New York.

In the Second World War he was chairman of the Treasury's War Finance Committee of Illinois and in the first post-war years served on the President's commission on higher education.

He was a Centurion for twenty-four of his seventy-seven years.

John V. Van Pelt

(Every effort was made to secure information about John V. Van Pelt, from friends or from other sources, but without success. It is unfortunate that it is therefore impossible to prepare a memorial to him.—R.B.)

William Crawford White

There is a popular belief among laymen (who know nothing about it, of course) that surgeons always recommend surgery as a cure for almost every ill. To this alleged practice, Bill White was surely an exception. A Centurion, suffering from a hernia, once consulted him and was amazed to be told that all he needed was a truss. Above all things else, Dr. White was honest. Friends and patients sometimes mistook his honesty for rudeness. He was frank and forthright often to the point of bluntness. When they first met him, some of his soft-spoken southern colleagues were disturbed by his Yankee brusqueness, but they soon learned its truth-telling value and came to know that any praise from him was genuine. One close associate remembers that after he had made some abrupt comment a look of surprise came over his face as if he wondered where his own words had come from. "Sarcasm or meanness had no part in his personality."

During his professional career, he developed at an early date an interest in cancer of the breast, and before his retirement from the active practice of surgery he had won a national reputation as a specialist in diseases of the female breast.

As a teacher, he was always direct and simple. He was not overbearing or pontifical with his students, but preferred to discuss problems and basic principles with an open mind and flexibility of thought. He enjoyed being with his students and liked the Socratic method of education.

Away from his hospital and office, he was an excellent tennis player and often beat the younger interns. In the Century, he was at the top in cowboy pool. He has taught many a new member how to play and made him an addict of our favorite sport.

William Crawford White was born in Hoboken and educated at Columbia and Wesleyan. He did his internship at Roosevelt Hospital, an institution he later served in many capacities. He held surgical posts, too, at Tuxedo Memorial, St. Luke's, Morristown Memorial, Norwalk, Connecticut, and other hospitals.

As president of the New York County Medical Society, he conducted a campaign to get rid of what he called "financial malnutrition" of the public health program of New York. He demanded the elimination of sub-standard salaries in the Health Department and the more extensive use of proven health procedures.

In 1930, he said, to the surprise of both physicians and laymen, that in its early stages cancer could generally be cured. In one much publicized speech, he stated that "when a tumor is diagnosed early there is no good reason why a complete operation may not effect a cure in almost all cases." At that time, this was thought a radical statement, but its truth has since been shown and it has given much encouragement to patients who have taken the advice before their cases matured.

He was captain in the A.E.F. Medical Corps in the First World War. He was a founder of the American Board of Surgery, a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, two-year president of the American Surgical Association, and director, for seven years, of the American Cancer Society.

One of the most significant things that was ever said about Bill White was that "he truly lived with his patients' problems."

Harold George Wolff

It was a sad irony that Harold Wolff should have died of the very trouble that he had helped arrest in so many patients. Dr. Wolff was a neurologist, a leader in the study of the vascular system of the brain. He made penetrating investigations of the causes and cures of headaches and this took him into the field of psychosomatics. He believed that certain kinds of headaches were caused by emotions such as anger or fear, but he felt that the bottling up of such emotions was more dangerous than their expression.

Older New Yorkers will remember houses on West Forty-second Street that had gardens behind them. Wolff was born and lived his boyhood in one of these. There was a grape arbor in the backyard. Harold was an only child, the son of a commercial artist. He spent his summers in the New Jersey Highlands and, in later life, canoeing on the Shrewsbury River was one of his favorite recreations.

After receiving his B.S. from the College of the City of New York in 1918, he went to Harvard Medical School where he received his M.D. in 1923. He was trained in internal medicine at Roosevelt Hospital, in neurology under Centurion Foster Kennedy at Bellevue, in neuropathology at the Boston City Hospital, and in psychiatry with Centurion Adolph Meyer at Johns Hopkins. He studied also in Austria. In 1932, he was appointed head of the Department of Neurology at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

Although his principal work was as an investigator, he was also talented as a teacher. He attracted young men, and many of his students who are now professors in medical centers in various parts of the world will not forget the rich and often dramatic qualities of his lectures. He was, too, a prolific writer, and nearly 500 publications bear his signature.

One of his conclusions after some thirty years of study was that the nervous system was involved in almost all diseases. Tension and fear, he was sure, could cause physical disease. This concept, he felt, brought unification to human pathology. "It emphasizes," he said, "that in man's pathological reactions his goals, purposes and aspirations are of the utmost importance."

Harold Wolff was president of the American Neurological Association, editor of the Journals of Psychosomatic Research and Psychosomatic Medicine, and president of the Association for the Study of Human Ecology and of the Association for Research in Mental and Nervous Diseases. He was also chief editor of the Archives of Neurology.

He was a Centurion for twelve years.
